Alison M. Jones received the 2015 Philip Hyde Grant for her No Water-No Life project that looks at six case study watersheds to illustrate current threats to freshwater systems and to propose sound management policies and solutions.

Jones’ $2,500 grant award will be used to translate interviews that have been conducted during the project’s 30+ photographic expeditions. These expeditions use still photography, videography, and interviews with local stakeholders to record historical, current, and potential watershed management challenges and solutions.

The $1,000 grant was awarded to Michelle A. Butler in 2015. Butler is a graduate student at the Academy of Art University in San Francisco.

She is working on a photo-documentary thesis project to raise awareness about the condition of birds in the Americas. It highlights the habitats needed for nesting, wintering and migration and calls for conservation efforts that citizens can make to help protect these essential components to our ecosystem.
